

ABSTRACT

Radiation-induced damage to a lens material in a projection exposure system is reduced by selection of maximum design fluence values H_D for lenses and at least one lens made of a material having a characteristic transition point T_{RC} after exposure to a given amount of radiation, wherein, for instance, $T_{RC} < 0.8 \cdot H_D$ among other relationships and/or characteristics of the lenses.